

I would like to say that satellite radio is the first thing that has offered this nation the chance to listen to something other than what corporations try to sell to listeners. I know what's going on in the broadcasting industry. I have a degree in telecommunications and am fully aware of how poor service and bad taste has coincided with the large corporations trying to poison music by making more of a business than it absolutely needs to be. I am for competition. I am for capitalism. But you surely must see how over-the-air broadcasting has lost nearly all of its credibility.

From tv stations airing nothing but reality shows to the radio playing the same songs over and over again.

I understand that these outlets are trying to profit. But if they opened their eyes and ears, they'd realize that they've missed out on millions and millions of viewers or listeners. XM is a place where these people can go. A place devoid of overhyped crappy bands and repetitive rap artists.

In brief, I would be more than happy to turn my AM/FM radio off completely if I could. They don't care about those listeners who fall through the cracks. XM should be allowed to air anything that traditional stations air, and I, the consumer, will decide what is heard on my radio.
